A CUTE REPORTER

It is a common saying, that it is not always wise to take people by their looks. I had at one time, a junior assistant who had quite a harmless and innocent look, and a manner to all appearances, trank, open and friendly. He was not clever as a reporter, but he at all times made such a display of willingness that his defects were perhaps. ingness that his defects were, perhaps, winked at. He had a shy, insinuating way with him, and when he wanted a favor he invariably managed to get it. I remember he had a private cupboard in the office, and in this he kept books of reference, pots of honey, writing materials, buodles of cigars, sponge cakes, and bottles of wine, British and feeting the feetin HENRY DINWOODEY, foreign; the foreign was for those who could assist him, and the British was SLET LAKE CITY. could assist min, and people from whom all he wanted was their good opinion He had at times a peculiar, stilly, al-most idiotic manner, but there was al-ways some method in his madness.

I cemember he and I went once to re-port a meeting. He was an incompet-ent note-taker, but would undertake to report anything, and trust for a way our of the difficulty. When we reached the office in order to write the out speeches, he suddenly exclaimed. "You must be rather fatigued Mr. — have a glass of wine, and a buscuit?" both of which ho produced eagerly and offered with apparrent sincerity. There was always found to be something behind these spontaneous exhibitions of generosity, and in this instance it was not long manifesting itself. His great difficulty was with the notes he had taken, they were incorrect and incomplete and he know it, and to cover the defect he smoothed my features with wine and buscuit, and then offered to write out the whole meeting at my dictation, an arrangement which relieved me of manual labor and him from ignominious faiture. The scheme was so prominent a feature of his life that it was understood by his colleagues, and when any of them received a citar at his bands he asked himself. "What shall I be asked to do for this?"

This young gentleman once did a clever thing to worm himself into the good graces of a young lady whose father had retired from business, and who had prospects which entitled her to considerable choice in a matrimonial way. The girls father seeing the at tention that was being bestow d upon his daughter, delivered himself of an emphatic protest arainst the continuance of the engagement, thereupon this young schemer gave up his visits, but not his efforts to attain his object. The young lady's father was a firm be liever in phrenology, and placed implicit reliance in the statements of its professors. Boom after this rupture a celebrated American phrenological examinations. The junior reported one of this gentleman's lectures and made himself known to the lecturer, who, for reasons which may be understood without being fully explained) made much of our young friend and in due course prepared a chart' fais phrenological development. Be ore this was done, the young sentleman had told the professor that he wanted the chart for a particular purpose. Whether under the circumstances that was necessary in order to

What Mothers Say.

The keen parential instinct is sharper in its preceptions than the tutored brain of the philosopher: therefore, when Mothers say, as they universally do, that there is nothing like Hale's Honey of Horchound and Tur, for the coughs, colds, boarseness and croupy symptoms to which children, from their impradence are especially subject, no man who understands human nature, will discredit their testimony.
